

THE GRASSHOPPER

(a Fable by Aesop)

There once was a friendly grasshopper that grew up on a farm. He was a happy grasshopper. The field where he was born was full of food and friends.

Every day, during the summer, the grasshopper played in the sun. He loved the warmth of the sun. He jumped and he sang. He always played with the other grasshoppers going from one plant to the next. He was happy playing with his friends.

He loved to eat the green leaves on the plants. When he was not playing, he was eating. He would eat so much he could not jump. Then he would take a nap and wait for the next day.

The grasshopper only worried about today. When he was happy, he would play. When he was hungry, he would eat. When he was tired, he would sleep. It was the same every day.

The grasshopper saw the ants were working very hard. He saw them coming and going all day long. They did not play. They did not eat. They did not sleep. They just worked and worked and worked. He thought they were silly to work all the time.

One day, while he was playing, an ant came by pulling a large leaf.

The grasshopper saw the ant and said to him, “Why don’t you come and play with me instead of working so hard. We can play music and have fun.”

The ant replied, “I’m saving food for the winter. I suggest that you save food for yourself.”

“Why should I worry about winter?” the grasshopper said. “There’s plenty of food to eat now.”

The ant did not listen to the grasshopper, and he continued to pull the leaf to his nest.

It was now autumn, and the weather was becoming colder. The clouds filled the sky. The plants began to turn brown. They were not green anymore. The grasshopper was having trouble finding food. He was not able to play all day. Now he had to work hard to find food to eat.

Soon he saw that the ants were not coming to the field anymore. He wondered what they were doing, so he went to their nest and looked down into the hole.

“Is anybody there?” he asked.

No one answered.

He yelled louder, “Is anyone there!?”

Just then, an ant poked his head out of his nest.

“What do you want?” the ant asked.

The grasshopper asked a question of his own, “I was wondering why you don’t come to the field anymore.”

The ant answered, “We have enough food to last for the whole winter. We don’t need to look for food anymore.”

“Do you have some food you could share with me?” the grasshopper asked the ant.

“No, we only have food for us. Why didn’t you save food for yourself? There was a lot of food for you to store for the winter,” the ant responded.

The grasshopper begged for the ant to give him some food, but the ant disappeared back into his nest without answering him.

The grasshopper went back to the field. He was sad he had not saved food. He was getting very hungry.

When the weather got colder and winter arrived, the grasshopper could not find any food to eat. He went to see the ants again to ask for food.

Once again, they said no.

He saw the ants eating the food they had saved during the summer. They were not hungry at all.

It was not long before the grasshopper died because there was no food to eat.

The ants knew this important lesson. It is always best to be ready for when the need is great.
